

Susan Helper is the AT&T Professor of Economics of the Weatherhead School of Management and chair of the Department of Economics at Case Western Reserve University. She is also a research associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research and the International Motor Vehicle Program as well as a judge for the Automotive News PACE award for auto supplier innovation. Her research focuses on the globalization of supply chains, especially in the auto industry. Helper earned a PhD in economics from Harvard University.