

Daniel Howes is a business columnist and associate business editor of the Detroit News. From 1999 to January 2003, he was based in Germany as the Detroit News' European correspondent and automotive columnist, and he has reported from more than 20 countries on three continents. Before heading to Europe, Howes was the paper's senior automotive writer and an investigative and projects reporter on the newspaper's business desk. He came to Detroit in 1993 from the Roanoke Times in Virginia, where he covered business, politics, and higher education. Howes is the winner of many journalism awards, including multiple International Wheel Awards for column writing and a four-time winner of the Northwestern University's Medill Award for general markets coverage. He also is a three-time finalist for the prestigious Gerald Loeb Awards and was awarded a Loeb honorable mention in commentary for columns written in 2007. He is a regular contributor to News/Talk 760-WJR radio in Detroit, and appears often on radio and television in the United States and overseas. Howes holds a bachelor's degree in history from The College of Wooster and a master's degree in international affairs from Columbia University, and he was a fellow at the Knight Center for Specialized Journalism
