

James Rubenstein is a professor of geography at Miami University (Ohio), where he administers undergraduate programs in urban planning and environmental science. He is also a consultant with the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. Rubenstein is the author or co-author of seven books, including three on the auto industry—The Changing U.S. Auto Industry: A Geographical Analysis (1992), Making and Selling Cars: Innovation and Change in the U.S. Automotive Industry (2001), and Who Really Made Your Car? Restructuring and Geographic Change in the Auto Industry (2008, with Thomas H. Klier). Rubenstein received his AB from the University of Chicago, his MS from the London School of Economics and Political Science (UK), and his PhD from Johns Hopkins University.