

Peter Gosselin

Peter Gosselin is the national economics correspondent for the Los Angeles Times and author of the forthcoming book, High Wire; The Financially Precarious Lives of American Families (Basic Books). He began his journalism career at New York state's smallest daily newspaper, the Catskill Daily Mail (circulation 4,007), and has worked at a variety of papers, among them: the Boston Globe and the Providence (Rhode Island) Journal. He has won a variety of awards including back-to-back George Polk awards for investigative reporting.

Mr. Gosselin has a bachelor's degree in philosophy from Brown University and an MBA in economics from Columbia.