

Peter Kuhn

Peter Kuhn is professor of economics and department chair at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He has previously held faculty positions at McMaster University and the University of Western Ontario, and visiting faculty appointments at Princeton University, University College London, the London School of Economics, the University of Munich, and the Australian National University. His PhD (1983) is from Harvard University. Dr. Kuhn is a Research Fellow of the Center for Economic Studies in Munich and the Institute for the Study of Labor (IZA) in Bonn. Dr. Kuhn's past positions include serving as Principal Investigator of the Canadian International Labour Network (CILN), and Program Director of the Canadian Employment Research Forum (CERF).

Dr. Kuhn's research spans the field of labor economics, including the economics of trade unions, wage and employment discrimination, immigration, displaced workers, unemployment, employment contracts, and comparative labor markets. He is editor of a volume of papers entitled Losing Work, Moving On: International Perspectives on Worker Displacement, published by the W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research. He is also co-directing a study of labor unions in Latin America, funded by the Inter-American Development Bank. Current research interests include the diffusion and effects of internet job search methods, and the role of non-cognitive skills such as leadership ability in wage determination.
